

Dolls with values

There's more to Karito Kids, by KidsGive, than meets the eye. Besides being fun to play with, Karito Kids teach children about the importance of social responsibility and charitable giving. Each doll, book or accessory, also comes with a code that is used on the company Web site karitokids.com.

Once this code is entered your child will then be able to cast their vote for one of four charitable projects that will help children in some of the countries you read about. The project with the most votes will receive a donation by KidsGive, creator of Karito Kids products. Your child will kept up to date on the chosen project with periodic e-mails.

Each doll retails for $100. They are available at G. Willikers in Portsmouth, Village Bookstore in Littleton and Dilly's for Kids in Keene, as well as www.HappyPlanetToys.com.
